Home Hazardous Waste Inventory

If asked what hazardous chemicals exist around your home, could you identify them? You don't have to look far to find everyday household products that contain hazardous chemicals. You can find them in the form of weed killers, pesticides, paints, paint thinners, used motor oils, antifreeze, spot removers, and oven cleaners. Every household has these potentially dangerous chemicals stored under the kitchen sink, in the basement, or in the garage. Please take a few moments to inventory your home for any of these hazardous wastes. During the inventory identify and mark expiration dates; make sure lids and containers are secure; sort and identify different types (paints, cleaners, solvents, lubricants, etc.); observe cautions (cyanides, acids, etc.). NEVER pour liquids into a common container. For those items that are damaged, mismarked/unidentifiable or expired, place in a box for proper disposal. Additionally, items that are still usable but not needed by your household should be shared with someone who will use the item. Storing hazardous waste "just in case I ever need it" is a dangerous thing to do both for the environment and for your family's health.
